I am writing to apply for the Learning & Development Specialist role at HealthCorps. Your mission to improve health outcomes through near-peer mentorship and community-based programming is both meaningful and practical. I am drawn to the idea of building training systems that directly impact how mentors show up for students.

Although my professional background is in software engineering, I have spent years doing exactly what this role requires: translating complex information into clear, usable training resources. In my work as a Web Developer, I regularly created onboarding documentation, video tutorials, and quick-reference guides for new team members. I learned that effective training is not about dumping information, but about understanding how people actually learn and meet them there.

A key part of this role involves partnering with curriculum and program teams to pressure-test activities before rollout. In my previous experience, I collaborated closely with product and design teams to review workflows, identify friction points, and provide feedback that made implementation smoother. I am comfortable asking the hard questions: Is this clear? Will people have what they need? Does this fit the time available?

I am also comfortable with the technical side of training delivery. I have experience creating and editing video content, building interactive modules, and working with various digital platforms. I am quick to pick up new tools and enjoy experimenting with formats that resonate with younger audiences, from short video tips to text-based guides.

In addition to my technical experience, I work effectively across multidisciplinary teams and communicate clearly with both technical and non-technical stakeholders. I am fluent in Bengali and English, have working knowledge of Russian and Hindi, and enjoy collaborating in international and cross-cultural environments.

I have attached my CV for your review and would welcome the opportunity to discuss how I can contribute to HealthCorps' mentor development efforts.

Sincerely,
