I am writing to apply for the Founding Brand Manager role at Joy_. What you have built with your Universal Purchasing Infrastructure is genuinely impressive, and the opportunity to shape the narrative around a product that redefines a 20 billion euro market is rare.

My background is in software engineering and AI, but I have spent years building products from scratch and owning how they are communicated to the world. I understand the gap between what technology does and how people perceive it. At Joy_, the technology is done, and the story is what will make it land. I know how to bridge that gap.

In my professional experience as a Web Developer, I was responsible for the full lifecycle of product delivery, from backend architecture to frontend experience. I worked directly with stakeholders to translate technical capabilities into clear, user-facing value. I have shipped features that required making complex systems feel simple and intuitive, which is exactly the challenge of making a "too good to be true" gift card believable.

One area that particularly interests me is the blend of data fluency and creative instinct you described. I am comfortable reading dashboards and understanding what converts, but I also know that creation comes first. I have built systems that required real-time decision-making and performance tracking, and I apply the same principle to brand work: build something bold, measure it, and double down on what works.

In addition to my technical experience, I work effectively across multidisciplinary teams and communicate clearly with both technical and non-technical stakeholders. I am fluent in Bengali and English, have working knowledge of Russian and Hindi, and enjoy collaborating in international and cross-cultural environments.

I have attached my CV for your review and would welcome the chance to discuss how I can help build the Joy_ brand from the ground up.

Sincerely,
